Tintoretto adopted as his motto Titian's colouring and Michelangelo's drawing, and won a reputation second to none in his time. Critics unite in regarding him as one of the greatest of masters in composition, drawing, and colour. His Paradise, Palazzo Ducale, is the largest picture on canvas in existence. One of his most famous pictures is the Miracle of St. Mark, in the Venice Academy. He was fond of painting the nude, and his female figures are charming. His portraits are masterly, rich in colour, and life-like.

In 1792, on the death of Sir Joshua Reynolds, he was appointed to the office of painter in ordinary to His Majesty. Between 1825 and the year of his death, some of his finest works were painted and exhibited, and none more beautiful than his groups of mothers and children, in portraying whose beauty and vivacity no English portrait painter except Reynolds has been happier.

Sir Henry Raeburn, the most noted of Scottish portrait painters, was born in Edinburgh. He was largely self-taught, receiving advice from David Martin, a painter of some skill, who assisted Allan Ramsay. Raeburn was exclusively a portrait painter. He seems to have made no primary studies, but commenced at once with the brush. While his art is marked, to some extent, by the fashion of his day, he is distinctly the least conventional of the great British portrait painters. His reading of character is peculiarly shrewd and convincing; each of his pictures is a portrait of an individual, and the results of his observation are stated with simplicity and directness, and a subtlety of handling, which places his work among the finest achievements of portrait painting.
